SHRUBS

Kolkwitzia Amabilis, Beautybush. 4-6 ft.

One of Dr. E. H. Wilson's and the Arnold Arboretum's choicest new introductions from China. Dr. Wilson says of it: "Most closely related to Abelia and Diervilla, it is harder than either and in elegance and beauty exceeds both. It has successfully withstood the vagaries and severities of the New England climate, and each season for a number of years past has flowered freely in the Arnold Arboretum. Our best plant is about 6 feet tall and 5 feet through, and in early June is a mass of arching sprays of blossom.

"The flowers are in pairs, and from 20 to 50 or more of them are borne in rounded cymose clusters which terminate the short, leafy, softly hairy current season's shoots, each from 3 inches to 4 inches long. The flower stalk, ovary and calyx-tube are densely clad with white spreading, strigose hairs, and the spreading acuminate calyx lobes are pinkish and persistent. The corolla is pale pink, deeper in the bud, tubular and lipped, slightly less than an inch long, sharply constricted in the lower fourth, and about $\frac{3}{4}$ inch across the mouth, it is translucent and the throat on the lower side is bearded and pleasingly mottled with orange.

"On account of its peculiar charm and fascination I suggest as a common name for this shrub that of 'Beautybush.'"
